

Member Organizer Institute Program Description

The AFT-Oregon Member Organizer Institute is seeking member organizers—AFT members who want to develop their organizing skills to build their union through outreach to other employees about their issues, rights in the workplace and how we can improve our lives and communities together as union members.

Through this program, member organizers will be participating in a intensive paid training program that includes a three-day organizing training with other institute member organizers, real-world field experience under guidance from AFT, AFT Oregon and local organizing staff and regular debriefs and assessments of skills and outcomes.

The goal of the institute is to train union members to build power, grow our membership levels, engage current members in our union and ensure the long-term sustainability of AFT locals by having members trained to continue their organizing work and help develop other members after participating in the institute. The program seeks to foster a culture of organizing, member engagement and accountability among member organizers, staff and local leadership.

Participation in the institute is for a ten to eleven week period. If accepted and hired to participate in the institute, member organizers will be expected to work ten hours a week for the duration of the program.

As the AFT seeks to build and expand our capacity and develop new leaders, we want to recruit members who haven't been engaged or held leadership positions in their union to do this work or previously participated in the member organizer program.

Entry into the Member Organizer Institute is competitive and positions are considered across all participating AFT Oregon locals, only those who meet the requirements and submit an application and complete the interview process will be considered.

Member Organizer Responsibilities & Requirements

Duties

Member organizer duties include:

- Conducting in person one-on-one conversations and small-group meetings to talk with colleagues and other workers about their issues and rights in the workplace
- Identify, recruit and mentor leaders.
- Activate and engage members.
- Recruit new members.
- Making assessments, identifying social networks and leaders, and moving workers to action.
- Participating in debrief meetings, trainings and team activities.

- Maintaining and coordinating database information on employees for organizing purposes.
- Weekly reporting of outcomes.
- Help develop a personalized organizing plan based on targeting and training and coordinate your member organizing work with the goals of your local union.

Requirements

Participants must:

- Be current members of their local union. Non-members will be considered only after they become members.
- Spend up to 10 hours a week performing activities related to the program and commit to the full term of the program.
- Participate in trainings, debriefs and team activities.
- Be willing to challenge themselves and others.
- Have a valid driver's license, have an insured vehicle and be willing to drive routes as required.

Overview

AFT-Oregon’s Member Organizer Institute is an intensive paid training program for new and emerging leaders interested in learning about building union strength through organizing. Over the course of 3 months, trainees in this program will attend some classroom sessions that will focus on developing and strengthening leadership skills relating to potential member outreach and member mobilization. In addition, most of their work will consist of real life experience in the field practice of those skills through contacting potential members and current members about current union issues and campaigns.

Entry into the member organizer academy is competitive, only those who submit applications and complete an interview will be considered.

Program Logistics

This is an approximate 3 month program where participants will be working in the field for 10 hours a week. Member Organizers will be directly trained and supervised by AFT, AFT-Oregon, and/or local organizing staff. Participants must have a car, car insurance, and a valid driver’s license.
